Présentation

The relationship between law and economics has been questioned since at least the 19th century, and, even nowadays, the two disciplines are considered as rather separated in traditional law or economics curricula. However, and that is probably one of the great achievements of the law and economics movement, the relationship between the two disciplines is extremely fertile. Even better, this approach makes it possible to question traditional legal approaches, concepts or doctrines and thus promotes a more intimate knowledge of the law.

This course will provide students with a critical introduction law and economics, its methodology and its relevance for different fields of law.
